THE ADVOCATES' SOCIETY ESTABLISHES THE MODERN ADVOCACY TASK FORCE

The Advocates' Society has established a Modern Advocacy Task Force to make recommendations for the reform of the Canadian justice system. The recommendations of the Task Force will seek to combine the best measures by which Canadian courts have adapted to the COVID-19 pandemic with other measures designed to ensure meaningful and substantive access to justice for the long term.

The Advocates' Society believes that permanent changes to our justice system require careful research, analysis, consultation, and deliberation.

“This is a pivotal moment for the Canadian justice system,” said Guy Pratte, incoming President of The Advocates' Society. “There is no doubt that we are learning a great deal from the changes to the system brought about by necessity during this crisis. We have a unique opportunity to reflect on this experience and use it to enhance the efficiency and quality of the justice system. We must do that while preserving the fundamental right of litigants to have their cases put forward in a meaningful and direct way before courts and other decision-makers.”

The Task Force is composed of members of The Advocates' Society from across the country. They will be guided by an advisory panel of some of the most respected jurists and counsel in our country.

The Task Force's mandate is to provide insight and analysis to assist in the modernization of the justice system. It will be informed by experience, jurisprudence and Canadian societal norms. The Task Force will offer recommendations designed to ensure that the Canadian legal system provides a sustainable, accessible and transparent system of justice in which litigants and the public have confidence.

In the fall of 2020, the Modern Advocacy Task Force will hold a virtual symposium that will bring together thought leaders from the bar and the bench across Canada and beyond to discuss these important issues. An interim report is expected in the fall of 2020 and the final report is to be delivered no later than April 2021.
